Editorial

As Matthew announced in the last number of the Gazette he has stepped down as Editor and we all like to thank him for his hard work in keeping the Society’s members regularly informed. My role as editor means the Gazette leaving Sheffield after five years and 17 issues and moving west to Liverpool. This may also be a time for more fundamental changes. At the Annual General Meeting of the SSHM this summer the future of the Gazette was discussed particularly in the light of David Wright’s work in establishing and maintaining the Society’s Web site (http://www.nott.ac.uk/depts.html#arts). Since not all Society members have access to electronic communications it was decided for the present that the Gazette and the Web pages would contain similar information and would be run in tandem. This should remain under active consideration and other options will be given coverage in the Gazette. The internet is already being used for other functions by Society members such as the Science Medicine and Empire email discussion group and bibliographic review of literature (http://info.ox.ac.uk/~lincl4140/index.html). Developments such as this aid the increasingly international outlook of the society: Dr Elizabeth Fee has been appointed as a third editor of the Journal and the 1997 Annual conference will be a joint meeting with the International Network for the History of Public Health.

I would welcome your views on the future of the paper Gazette or some form of printout. Indeed I would welcome all items of interest. It not only makes my job as editor easier but makes a newsletter such as this of more value to its readership. Send in the news, conference details and reports, overseas members reports and talking points which have made the Gazette a success for the Society’s members. If this editorial reads rather like the opening gambits of my predecessors that is because I need your support too, and hope that I can maintain the newsletter to its consistent high standard.

Helen Power, Editor.

Job Description: Reviews Editor.

The person concerned should have a good knowledge of the field and reasonably wide contacts with scholars working in it. They should have undergone themselves the experience of publishing, reviewing and being reviewed. Reviews editors should be aware of the importance of covering fields outside their own field of expertise.

The Reviews Editor should be committed to widening the circle of reviewers, particularly young researchers, and to maintaining and expanding the pool of overseas reviewers. They should be prepared to persevere to get significant books reviewed in initially unsuccessful. Needless to say no hint on snobbery, jobbery or academic politics should affect their decisions.

The Reviews Editor needs access to secretarial assistance, a telephone, electronic mail, and a sympathetic head of department whose support must be guaranteed. It is important that at least one day a week is devoted to reviews. Deadlines for submission of proofs etc must be met promptly.

Most the rest concerns technical matters and can be picked up from the retiring editor. However, the incoming editor should try and improve the procedures he or she inherits where possible.

Greta Jones, Reviews Editor.

FORTHCOMING EVENTS

(The information given below is accurate as far as we know. However, we accept no responsibility for errors. Please contact the organiser to confirm details.)

SSHM CONFERENCES.

Insanity, Institutions and Society: New Research in the Social History of Madness
University of Exeter, 18-20 April 1997.

The Spring 1997 Conference of the Society will take place at St Luke’s Campus, University of Exeter and will offer a survey of new research on the social history of insanity with a particular focus on the institutions dealing with the insane from the eighteenth century to the present. The organiser hope to use the event to review the most recent scholarship in the field and invite leading contributors to respond to fresh findings and innovations in research.

There will be general papers from Roy Porter and Andrew Scull as well as a session particularly devoted to the problems preserving and utilising medical records led by Eddie Higgins. A bus tour around the architecture of the key asylums in the Exeter area is also planned for those interested in the physical organization of these institutions.

Social History of Medicine: Reviews Editor.

It is with great regret that the Executive Committee and Editorial Boards were given notice of Greta Jones’ intention to step down from a most successful period as Reviews Editor. We are beginning the search for Greta’s successor and should welcome applications and nominations for the position of Reviews Editor. We are keen to have someone appointed by Spring 1997 in order for there to be some overlap and a handover period to ease the new incumbent into the job. Please send nominations to Anne Marie Rafferty, Chair, Executive Committee and Search Committee. Many thanks in anticipation.
Proposed contributors will include Richard Adair on the Lunacy Commission, Jonathan Andrews on Scottish asylums, Peter Bartlett on the Poor Law, Harriet Deacon on Robben Island, Anne Digby, Waltraud Ernst on Indian Asylums, Bill Forsythe, Edward Higgs on medical records, David Hirst on Welsh asylums and the family, Shula Marks on the Cape asylum, Jo Melling. Hilary Marland on female insanity, Pamela Michael on Welsh pauper lunatics, Roy Porter on the eighteenth century, Andrew Scull, Julia Sheppard on hospital records, Len Smith on the Old Poor Law and asylum provision, Akiko Suzuki on Bethlem, Wendy Walker on the Chichester Asylum records, Lorraine Walsh on philanthropy and insanity, Susan Ward on medieval graveyards and insanity evidence, John Welshman on modern community provision, David Wright on Buckinghamshire experiences.

Since places are limited, the organisers request that those interested in attending the conference should use the application form enclosed in the present issue of the Gazette to book as soon as possible. A deposit is requested with each application.

The Right to Health in Modern Society
11-12 July 1997, Oxford.
The Wellcome Trust for the History of Medicine, Oxford, is organizing a conference on the evolution of the relationship between health, illness, and concepts of citizenship in the nineteenth and twentieth centuries. The conference will concentrate mainly on the British experience but there will also be contributions from Western Europe. We hope to discuss some central issues in both the history of modern health care and the sociology/philosophy of citizenship. Papers will examine the meaning of the right to health in terms of health status, and the right to health care services; the meaning of the obligation to promote health on the part of the individual, the family, the voluntary sector, employers and the state; and the boundaries of the concepts of citizens' rights and duties - situations of conflict between ethical imperatives; the treatment of non-citizens (ethics of experiments on the insane, dead, persecuted minorities); and whether rights to health can be abrogated by the citizen (euthanasia).
Further details from Edward Higgs by May 31. Postal address: Wellcome Trust for the History of Medicine, University of Oxford, 45-47 Banbury Road, Oxford, OX2 6PE. E-mail: eddy.higgs@wuhm.ox.ac.uk. Tel: 01865-74616. Fax: 01865-274605.

Family and Household - Revisting Concepts and Experience - Call for papers
The annual conference of the Social History Society of the UK will be held at the city site of Nottingham Trent University, with accommodation in the nearby Stakis Hotel. Offers of papers are invited from historians and others, and postgraduate students are also encouraged to submit offers of discussion papers, relating to work in progress, to be included in proposed workshop sessions. The following list of themes and topics is offered as guidance, but contributions outside these areas are welcome; there are no limits to period or place. It is also hoped that offers will be forthcoming from those seeking to challenge, as well as those seeking to explore, traditional understandings and usages of the terms Family and Household; drawing on theoretical concepts and on investigations of past experience, as well as on methodological issues: Kith, Kin, Clans and Castes and their workings; The Economics of Families and Households; Creation of Family and Household culture and reputation and their wider implications; Power Structures and Procedures (including gender issues). All enquiries and offers of papers (send a 1 page summary by 16 May 1997) to Mrs Linda Persson, Admin Secretary, Social History Society of the UK, Centre for Social History, Lancaster University, Lancaster LA1 4YF. Tel: 44 (0)1524 59605. Email: L.Persson@lancaster.ac.uk.

OTHER NEWS
Medical Museums Terminology Working Group
At the invitation of the UK Museums Documentation Association (MDA) a new Medical Museums Terminology Working Group held its first meeting at the Wellcome Centre in London on 6 September 1996. Representatives from a varied group of British museums and archives with specialist medical collections discussed currently available thesauri and terminologies and sought to identify the more glaring gaps left by existing sources.
Most present thought the naming of instruments and equipment less of a problem than identification, dating and collation of the constantly changing terms used through medical history to describe physical and mental conditions and diseases. A single term such as 'melancholia' or 'fever' might appear across widely different chronological periods, in different cultures and social groupings, and have a host of disparate meanings from the vaguest lay use to the clinically specific.

It was agreed that the Group could play a very useful role in pulling together a series of compatible, yet flexible, terms lists in this and other relevant fields. Catherine Draycott of the Wellcome Centre for Medical Sciences agreed to act as chair (Wellcome Centre Medical Photographic Library, 210 Euston Road, London NW1 2BE, Tel: 0171 611 8588. Fax: 0171 611 8577) and Helen Fryers of the Thackray Museum, Leeds as Secretary (Thackray Medical Museum, Beckett Street, Leeds LS9 7LP, Tel: 0113 244 4343, Fax: 0113 247 0719).

Anyone who may be able to assist with guidance on sources, particularly of terms lists for obsolete medical terminology, and anyone working with a relevant collection who is interested in joining the group or being kept informed of its progress is invited to make contact through the Terminology Projects Manager MDA (Museums Documentation Association, 347 Cherry Hinton Road, Cambridge, CB1 4DH, Tel: +44(0)1223 242848, Fax: +44(0) 1223 213575. Modern Records Centre: University of Warwick

I would like to draw the attention of researchers in the social history of medicine to the archive resources of the Modern Records Centre (MRC) at the University of Warwick. The MRC aims to collect and make available for research original sources for British political, social and economic history, with particular reference to labour history, industrial relations and industrial politics. After more than 20 years to result is the gathering together of a wide range and depth of material of interest to those researching the social history of medicine in the 19th and 20th centuries.

For those interested in the medical professionals and their assistants, the obvious sources are the archives of the Medical Practitioners Union (MPU; ref MSS.79), the Confederation of Health Service Employees (COHSE; ref MSS.229) and NALGO (ref MSS.20). The MPU's archive, as well as including its various minutes, 1924-71, includes a run of Medical World, 1922-70. The COHSE archive includes a series of minutes, 1889-1929, for the National Poor Law Officers Association.

The archive of the Trades Union Congress (ref MSS.292) is one of the Centre's largest deposits. It includes files on accidents and rehabilitation, industrial health, industrial and non-industrial diseases and conditions (TB, blindness and deafness). Less obviously, there are files on rationing, workers' canteens and British Restaurants, the food industry, supplementary milk for school children, milk marketing and distribution, holidays and working hours, housing, National Health Insurance and the living wage.

The archives of individual unions also throw light on medical conditions. The Operative Stonemason's Society archive (ref MSS.78) includes the Formightly Returns, 1834-1910, described by the Webbs as 'perhaps the most valuable single record of the Trade Union Movement'. The Stonemason's was an immensely democratic society and every request to spend the society's funds had to be published in the Returns, a fortnightly newsletter circulated to all members. The result is detailed reports of members' ill-health and accidents, as well as reports on where work was to be found, and the local pay rates and conditions adopted.

For a searchable summary of the Centre's holdings look at its Webpage. The URL is http://www.warwick.ac.uk/services/library/mrcmmm.html. For further information, including a free copy of the Centre's Notes for Researchers, contact the Archivist, Modern Records Centre, University of Warwick, Coventry, CV4 7AL, Tel: 01203 524319. Email: archives@warwick.ac.uk.

Medicine and Conflict (formerly Medicine and War)

A publication which may be of interest to members. Single issues of the journal which appears quarterly and is indexed on Medline and Index Medicus are available from the editorial offices at 601 Holloway Road, London, N19 4DJ (£5.00 inc postage & packing).

In particular a reader has drawn attention to an article in volume 12, 1966, 90-106 by P Van Dungen, 'Dr Emil Flusser, forgotten precursor of the medical peace movement', which may interest those who attended the Annual Conference in 1995 on Medicine and Modern Warfare.

CONFERENCE REPORT

Race, Science and Medicine

SSIM Autumn Conference
18-19 September 1996, University of Southampton.

This autumnal conference in Southampton was a delight. Serene surroundings in the sunny South offered a suitable pause before the storm of new semesters. The companionable atmosphere and smooth organization were favourable to constructive contemplation. A long, distracting train journey (at least from Manchester) provided opportunities for uninterrupted study rarely enjoyed in university departments these days. And, just as a bonus, we heard a collection of excellent papers and relished some fruitful and stimulating discussions.

The conference began with Nancy Ley's Stepan's lucid exploration of the history of racial science in relation to debates about gender and citizenship. Starting with a brief survey of recent writings on the 'paradox' of 'gender equality versus gender differences', Stepan moved on to argue that the history of the naturalised body, or the history of embodiment, was central to the stories of citizenship and pointed out some of the new historical questions raised by this approach. Emphasising the need to remember that racial science, like all other sciences, is 'always a social product.' Stepan then explored the relevance of histories of racial science (and, in particular, studies of the relation of the natural to the political) for the study of gender and citizenship.

Subsequent speakers on the first day explored a variety of critical issues in widely different geographical and chronological settings. With his close scrutiny of John Atkins, Norris Szelewa-Mante revealed that concepts of racial constitution were already being imaginatively expounded in the early eighteenth century. Drawing on her extensive study of the fieldwork practices of the 'Manchester School' of anthropologists in their political, social and cultural context, Lyn Schumaker argued that 'the racial language and practices of Africans and white settlers in southern Africa played as important a role as that played by contemporary anthropological theory' in shaping the anthropologists' own ideas of race. In a finely detailed account of segregation practices at the Robben Island Asylum in the late nineteenth century, Harriet Deacon reminded us that racial categories could change quite quickly, that is, in the space of a few decades. And Waltraud Ernst's three-pronged study of institutional practices in Bengal, Bombay and Madras demonstrated the ways in which differences in hospital structure related to varying constructions of racial issues in different social, political and economic contexts.

After tea, a paper by David Arnold (summarised in his absence) was used to introduce a general discussion on race, science and medicine in the colonies. Arnold's paper made three points: first, that malaria served as a metaphor for racial decay and degeneration in India; second, that ideas of racial degeneration constituted a central element of both British and middle class Indian self-perceptions; and third, that ideas of race were not immutable. These points were explored in detail in the subsequent lively discussion led by Shula Marks who raised a number of challenging questions about the connections between racial, scientific and medical concepts and about the impact of colonialism on racial ideas.

The first day was rounded off by two papers on visual representations of race, science and medicine. Mark Jackson's analysis of changing images of people with what was originally referred to as 'mongolism' was followed by Michael Clark's perceptive discussion of a number of evocative film clips from the collection at the Wellcome Trust and Wellcome Institute. As Waltraud Ernst pointed out in discussion, visual representations are too often ignored as suitable sources by historians of medicine.

The second day of the conference was as full and fertile as the first. Cora Kaplan's forceful presentation on gender, nation and racial thinking in Victorian Britain included a convincing exposition of the links between Dickens' essays and his attendance at freak shows. Jonathan Sawday's account of the Piltdown forgeries was a candid and entertaining reconstruction of a consuming mystery. After lunch, papers by Bernard Harris (on anti-alienism, health and social reform), Paul Weindling (on typhus and race), Hannah Augstein (on the 'Caucasian hypothesis'), Matthew Thomson (on British anthropology and social psychology in the twentieth century) and Deborah Thom (on race and intelligence) continued to inform and entertain until the concluding session, after which we drifted back to our separate corners of the historical world, wiser and happier, awaiting the book.
